William H. Hale of First place is not to be trifled with by the Board of Health. "Show me," says he, and when the board refuses he has 'em in court. It was the turn of Dr. Alonzo Blauvelt this morning. Dr. Blauvelt is the health officer of the borough, and he has the nerve to refuse to show Mr. Hale the "complaint book," in the office of the department, on Clinton street, and flatly told Mr. Hale that he would lose his job in a jiffy if he dared to do such a thing. Mr. Hale went to the Adams street court to see about the law on the subject and he had the doctor before Magistrate Dooley this morning to determine if the health officer had violated the law by declining to exhibit the complaint book to him.

Somebody had been complaining about Mr. Hale, who is a lawyer, and he went to the health office to find out who the person was. The refusal to show the books of the department to him was backed by the exhibition of the rule of the Board of Health, printed in glaring red ink on the top of every complaint blank. It reads:

"The name of any person complaining to this department of a nuisance shall not be disclosed to any one by an officer or employe of the Department of Health. Any violation of the above rule by an employe of this department will result in the summary dismissal of the offender." Mr. Hale complains that this is all bosh, and that no public department cap legally make rules to hide the identity of persons who make complaints against other people. And he holds, too, that no Board of Health or any other public body could legally dismiss, summarily or otherwise, one of the subordinate employes who violated such a ridiculous rule. For any lawyer knows, says Mr. Hale, that such a dismissal would not hold in law. That was the situation as Mr. Hale presented it in a long speech to Magistrate Dooley this morning, and the magistrate looked mightly interested in the contentions of Mr. Hale, and pored over law books that were brought ward given L. S. ATKINSON, Venerable Man Has No Definite Plans to the bench for him. One of the aspresent to protect the interests of Dr. should apply to the Board of Health, and not try to have a subordinate punished for refusing to show the books,
