

BELATED ITALIAN DRIVER HAS NOTHING UP HIS SLEEVE

VINCENZO TRUCCO.

"You see, I have nothing up my sleeve," was the sole reply which Vincenzo Trucco, head of the Isotta delegation at the speedway, would vouchsafe when queried as to whether the extremely late arrival of his crew on the track signified that he had some carefully planned surprise to spring on the public at the last moment. Just then the camera man got busy, with the resultant accompanying photograph. Trucco, as seen by his picture, is of the true high grade Italian type, with clear cut, aristocratic features, and a fine mien and bearing. He is making no predictions as to the manner in which his cars will perform during the coming contest, saying that he will know more about that after the race is over. The speed and bark of his boats, however—and boats they are if their rear end, which is unusually broad and flat, is to be taken into consideration—indicate that they have power and speed galore, hence ought to be heard from. The Frenchmen, by the way, Goux and Zaccarelli, fear them more than any other car in the race. As Trucco says, however, a better line can be made as to their ability when they finally get busy on Decoration day.
